EDUCATION.

"Institution or reformatory treatment is, I admit, absolutely necessary in certain cases, but should be inflicted, in my opinion, even in what are apparently 'bad' cases, only after release upon probation to suitable parents has been tried and has failed. It is only fair and just to give both parents and children an opportunity of proving their worth, and if they do not grasp that opportunity, then, and

Dr. Charles K. MacKellar, president of the State Children Relief Board, yesterday made the following statement:

"At short intervals during the five years that have elapsed since Mr. Wade passed the Neglected Children and Juvenile Offenders Act, the fact that there has been a continuous reduction in the number of children in the various reformatory institutions, including their responsibilities, both as regards the home surroundings and their personal influence, for it is the absence of proper reformation from childhood, such as these that is the principal cause of a child's lapse. Many cases can be enumerated where there has been a general improvement in the conduct of the children, since the inauguration of the Neglected Children's Act.

"The fact that fewer children are sent to ing the 'semi-penal' training ship Sobrón (the term is Captain Neilsen's), has been commented on in the press. And, strange to say, the circumstance has been deplored.

Various writers have pathetically stated that the ship is being "quietly starved"; that "she is not getting a fair deal" in the fact that, whereas she is capable of accommodating 600 boys, she has at present but 398 under confinement. It is true that the ship is overcrowded, but it is equally true that the percentage of cases in which a child has been placed on the ship has decreased since 1945. Surely it must be admitted that the natural way of dealing with delinquent children is to correct the undesirable tendency to do wrong in a good home environment and under proper parental supervision rather than to consign the offenders to a reformatory institution. It is true that the ship is not a home, but has described that a semi-normal establishment of home at Mittagong, which, as its name implies, is in no sense a cognate institution. "To a certain and very limited extent the establishment of the farm home has caused the present state of affairs; but it does not by any means account for the depletion. In 1965, when Mr. Wade, United Attorney-General in the Commonwealth Government, passed the 1964-65 survey, he found 444 informants, and now there are but 350, so that there is a shortage of 151; whilst there are at the present time but 103 boys at the farm home, of whom 36 are from 9 to 11 years of age, and stantly passed by uniformed officials, they have the idea thoroughly impressed upon their minds that 'they are doing time.'

'Were any proof necessary to show that the humane methods which have been rendered possible by the use of the farm home have been attributed by an insurance in juvenile delinquency, it would be found in the report which I recently received from the Inspector-

therefore ineligible for semi-penal treatment, and of the remaining 57 four are cripples, four are mentally defective, and seven are suffering from constitutional delicacy or organic

"Without going at length into the details of the divisional officers' reports, I would draw your attention to what is said of the notorious 'rocks area, which is included in Clarendon and St. Andrew's divisions. This is one of the most congested districts in the city, and here it is said—

"'The Act has proved effective in keeping the children off the streets.'"

"The regulations are faithfully observed by the children who trade in the streets," and

"The law gives the special magistrates discretion as to whether or not to examine private children whom the police officers would never have been so brutal as to hale before an ordinary police court—with to boot the fact that in some of the most congested districts of the city 'the number of neglected children in the street is practically nil' [vide police report].

"In the administration of that law, as I have already pointed out, the great majority of delinquent children are, under its humane provisions, sent to their own homes where they may receive the best treatment visited by the benefactors of the State Children Relief Department. And I may say that that duty is also undertaken and efficiently performed cretionary power to commit a delinquent child to a reformatory or to the farm home under the care of the State Children Relief Board, or to release him to his parents on probation for a fixed term. And I am glad to say by a large number of honorary probation officers who have on my advice been duly authorised by the Minister in terms of the Act. In this connection I cannot refrain in the majority of cases the latter course is adopted, with the result that is clearly set forth in the reports.

"It seems to me that a very pertinent question may be asked in this connection: What is the reason of the reformatories? Are delinquent children to be reformed, or are the reformatories to be provided for delinquent children? To put a parallel case: Are criminals to be provided for the gaols, or are the gaols to be provided for the prisoners? The Comptroller-General of Prisons tells us that in 1904, the year preceding the passing of the Neglected Children and Juvenile Offenders Act, the proportion of prisoners in our gaols to the general population was 15 per 10,000, but that it has now fallen to nine per 10,000, and notwithstanding the fact that several gaols in various parts of the country at the present time empty, he expresses satisfaction that the prison population continues to decrease.

"I am not going to argue that the decrease in the prison population has been brought about in any material degree by the working of the Neglected Children and Juvenile Offenders' Bill."

ders Act, but I am convinced that the probation officers' close supervision of the highest risk offenders will be more effective than a considerable proportion of the prison population is derived) has been a material factor in producing an improvement in the home life of the parents.

"It is a matter for astonishment to me that there should be any wallowing because of the fact that the children are in the 'bidge' in the first place."

MINISTERS AND THE LORD MAYOR.

Two matters of importance to the future development of the city have just been discussed at a conference between the Lord Mayor, Premier and Minister for Labor, on one side, and the Lord Mayor and the other.

The first was the question of a site for the fish market.

Since the M'Gown Government came into office negotiations have been pending for

The object with which the Children's Court was established was surely not merely to secure the conviction of children for having committed crime and then passing sentences of imprisonment upon them, but rather to determine the cause of their delinquency with which the children, and as a rule, their homes, were affected, and then to recommend to the Minister such remedial treatment as would restore the unfortunate children and of cases, necessitate incarceration for a short time in a reformatory, where a rigid discipline should be enforced and in a larger number of cases, especially where the children were very young, their being sent for a short period to one of the State county homes, where they would attend the ordinary Public school, and would be subject to a mild but careful supervision, and where everything would be done to make the children as comfortable as possible, and where the work was "doing time" would be entirely eliminated. From these homes it was and have otherwise held diverging views. Mr. Holman said last evening that the interview with the Lord Mayor was an exceedingly satisfactory one. "We regard the Council," he continued, "as practically a department of the Lord Mayor's office." The Minister for the Metropolis, and we want his efforts in the public interest to run in smoothness and harmony with the efforts hoped they would, after a short period of detention, be returned to their parents or boarded out. But it was clearly understood that the majority of the children who were from time to time brought before the Court, would be kindly and forcibly reprimanded by its special magistrate, and admonished as to the future conduct of his or her life. The Lord Mayor, as the chief magistrate of the metropolis, and, chiefly to blame for the children's misdeeds, would also be advised or admonished as to their care of the children, who would then be returned to their homes, where they would, from time to time or three or four times a week, be brought before the Court, as Mr. Nielsen and I did on 20 minutes' talk, as Mr. Nielsen and I did when we met Mr. Allen Taylor, Nottingham, on the 10th inst. I am sure that the way in which we met us I am glad to say the Lord Mayor takes exactly the same view. He wants to do the best he can for his own department—Sydney—but he fully appreciates the necessity of combining with that proper

"That course has been followed, and I may say that it has been followed without exception. I any that is similar. Without exception, all the children who are referred to the Department of Social Services are referred to the Department of Social Services as a result of the administration of the law advice that neglected and delinquent children should be treated on these lines. I was therefore surprised to observe in a recent report which was laid before Parliament that a totally different view was taken. The writer of the report was evidently of opinion that a more rigid disciplinary method should be adopted with the children, as he says 'undue leniency' has frequently been responsible for criminality in after years.' Now, in a small minority of cases I would be prepared to accept that statement as an axiomatic truth. In order to emphasize that aspect of the question, he quotes from an article in an English journal, recently published, the decision of the House of Commons at the Rochester Quarter Sessions, as follows:—

"The system of leniency which had been adopted of late years (in England) was a mistake. Probation was no punishment, but a reward. It was the reward of the days of idleness, when a select few and held in our dense scrubs out of the way of the police, are now fast becoming an established public institution amongst us. I desire to express my gratification at the appearance and adoption of the paper of the 10th inst. and to open my eyes to the necessity last from the secretary of the Preschers' Fraternal Association of Churches of Christ in New South ishment for many juvenile offenders, and he thought that in cases where the law allowed it flogging should be resorted to.' Wales. It would be well if the clergy generally would unite and with one voice denounce this crying evil, which, like alcoholic intemperance, tends to destroy the moral

"Now, in a general way, I entirely disagree with the view that leniency to delinquent children is a mistake, but I am of the opinion that in a particularly aggravated case, a brutal conduct even logging might be administered with good effect.

"What strikes me most forcibly in the quotation from the English journal is the obliquity in the mental vision of the reviewer. It is a little difficult to see for the

He says, 'Probation is no punishment, and the juvenile offender,' or, in other words, it is not a sufficient punishment, and in making that statement he clearly shows that he has not failed to realize the principle underlying the probation law. It never was meant to be regarded as a punishment, but merely as a sentence suspended during a fixed period of good behaviour, for the child is always liable to be brought to court in case of a breach of the conditions of probation. I am proud to show the results which have attended the administration of the probation law in this State. I have pleasure in attaching herewith a list of the children who have been sent to the hospital for several years, so you will see I have it a fair trial. Every one in the town knew of my case. When I was a girl I was sent to the hospital for several years, and I was treated at a hospital there, but without receiving any benefit. My face was disfigured very badly. A doctor told me that I should never get rid of it. I was sent to the hospital for several years, but without receiving any benefit. Then, one day, an uncle of mine recommended the ing hereto a return which, I think, will be of great interest to all concerned with the reformation of delinquent children, and which proves undeniably that the probation clause:

of the Act have, so far, been completely successful out of a total of 985 boys released on probation. I have not heard from you since 8, 1910 (when the return was compiled). It was found necessary to recommit 42 only. This speaks volumes indeed, and is a most effective reply to those who would advocate that juvenile offenders should be subjected to institutional treatment for the first or

"Considering the attached figures, what reasons can anyone advance on behalf of institutional treatment as opposed to the more humane method of release upon probation for delinquent children? Surely a child's natural sphere is in his own home, surrounded by the love and protection of a parent; and if the necessary correction of delinquency can be effected under those conditions, and with much benefit, where is the necessity for expending a large amount of the public money
